Consultation: Proposed CoFI guidance note on intermediated distribution

About this consultation

The purpose of this consultation is to seek feedback on proposed guidance that outlines our expectations when financial institutions are distributing products and services through intermediaries.

Read the proposed guidance.

Background

The Financial Markets (Conduct of Institutions) Amendment Act 2022 (CoFI) introduces a new conduct regime to ensure financial institutions (banks, insurers and non-bank deposit takers) comply with a fair conduct principle to treat consumers fairly. To ensure compliance with this "fair conduct principle", financial institutions are required to establish, maintain and implement effective fair conduct programmes (FCPs) and to take all reasonable steps to comply with the programmes.

Financial institutions will also be required to be licensed by the Financial Markets Authority – Te Mana Tātai Hokohoko (FMA) and to comply with statutory conduct duties introduced by CoFI. This includes requirements when they are distributing products and services through intermediaries (e.g. insurance or mortgage advisers, or car dealers selling vehicle finance or insurance).

CoFI is a principles-based regime with requirements that are flexible and non-prescriptive.

Financial institutions may deal with intermediaries that are licensed as financial advice providers (FAPs) or operate under a FAP licence. These intermediaries are subject to their own set of conduct duties under the financial advice regime. Ultimately our view is that the CoFI and financial advice regimes are complementary with broadly consistent overarching policy objectives – both require the consideration of consumer interests in relation to the distribution of products and services. The policy intention is that the dual regimes create a shared responsibility between financial institutions and FAP-licensed intermediaries for fair treatment and outcomes for consumers.

Purpose of the guidance

The guidance is intended to outline our expectations for intermediated distribution under CoFI at a high level, so they can be applied across different sectors and distribution models. The guidance is non-prescriptive. We want financial institutions to have flexibility to design their own approaches.

Our views in the guidance were informed by feedback from a series of workshops we held with financial institutions and intermediaries in July and August 2022 to support the development of this guidance. We thank all attendees for their participation and feedback, which was very valuable for us.

Role of the guidance

We recognise that the flexibility provided by principles-based regimes such as CoFI can produce uncertainty. By clarifying our expectations, this guidance is intended to provide financial institutions with confidence that they can design their fair conduct programmes in a proportionate manner that meets the CoFI distribution requirements without having unintended or unnecessary impacts on the financial institutions themselves or the intermediaries involved in distribution channels.

The development of this guidance is one of several activities we will be undertaking in relation to intermediated distribution. These steps include:

- Guidance: Clarifying our expectations in this guidance.
- Engagement: Ongoing engagement and dialogue with financial institutions and intermediaries on how they share responsibility for treating customers fairly when products and services are being distributed to consumers, and comply with their respective statutory obligations. This includes dialogue with individual firms, and at a sector and industry level. This will continue the significant sector-based engagement we have already undertaken in developing this guidance.
- Industry-led approaches: Encouraging financial institutions and intermediaries to lead innovation and look proactively at ways to achieve fair outcomes for consumers without unnecessary costs, including by exploring the development of standardised sector-based approaches. Industry associations can play a leadership role in this.
- Monitoring: Monitoring market practice as this evolves and matures, and communicating where we see good practice and where we see areas that could be improved.
